Boston Flower Exchange shareholder David Brown wraps up the work day. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Business of love not so rosy at Boston exchange

A rose by any other name. The U.S. flower industry has a few thorns, but its practitioners have thick skin.

The business of love isn't what it used to be. In the heyday of the multibillion-dollar wholesale flower industry, local farmers grew their blossoms and cutthroat vendors and salesmen hashed out deals in a floral stock exchange.

But things changed as wholesalers started ordering flowers from around the globe, piling up fuel and broker charges, and as the concept of romantic gifts grew to include Groupon getaways and gadgets.

"People don't buy flowers anymore," said third-generation flower man David Brown as he sat in the tiny office of The Boston Flower Exchange on Albany Street in South Boston. "Valentine's used to be the biggest week of the year. But we pay very high prices for our product."

Brown is the Exchange shareholder and owner of Chester Brown Wholesale Florist, which has been a member of the exchange since 1933.

"It's changed dramatically since I've been in the business," Brown said. "It used to be only Massachusetts grown, then it became New England. Then in the '60s and '70s, we started bringing flowers in on planes. So we buy from all over the world now."

Brown says the exchange works on an asking margin of about 40 percent, with sales usually closing with a profit in the mid-to-low 30s.

The exchange receives 500 to 800 boxes a week from across the globe, with 300 from South America.

The average box holds about 300 stems.

Brown's crew starts at 3:30 a.m. as flowers arrive from farms in Ecuador, Holland, Italy, Israel, France, Australia, Thailand and Costa Rica.

Pandemonium ensues as buyers haggle, and by noon, the shop is quiet.

Brown's wife, Ann, sits at a desk across from him. The couple met at the exchange decades earlier, when Ann was a buyer.

"We like to say we were intimate without being intimate," he says of their romance, which blossomed from friendship to love.

Ann describes the work as grueling, but still loves to get flowers as a gift, and David loves to give them. Peonies are her favorite.

"There is a hardness to this industry," David said. "Our competitors will come in and sneak around to get prices. We have a saying here: 'Are you buyin' or spyin'?'"

Decades earlier, the warehouse was a "rough and tumble" place, David said. "There was a lot of alcohol and even some drugs then, in the '70s and '80s, it was bad in here."

Ann calls the hours crazy. "It's hard to have a normal social life when you go to bed at 7 p.m.," she said.

"It's better now. If we were like that now, we wouldn't be able to survive. It's too competitive," said David. "We have to give 110 percent."

"Something happens to your skin, when your work with roses," says Boston Exchange flower salesman Patrick Porter, 55, a 30-year veteran. "You become almost immune to the thorns. Your skin turns like leather. You become cured."

Years ago, 2,000 customers a day would buy flowers in the exchange. That's dropped to about 1,500.

The Internet has put many brick-and-mortar flower shops out of business and has made it easier for floral designers to do without warehouses full of buds, Brown said.

He puts the price of a dozen red roses around Valentine's Day at $75-$125.

"There are guys out there selling roses for $19.99 a dozen. And then there are people selling roses for $200 a dozen, and they get away with it," Brown said.

Shuttle buses once again replaced red line trains at the JFK/UMass station on Thursday. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI/METRO

T: Red Line can't be drawn in snow

Transit. There's only one thing you can count on with the T. It isn't going to work.

There's always something lately when it comes to the T. On Thursday morning that something was a downed utility pole near the Red Line's JFK stop that snarled traffic and delayed shuttle buses.

Shuttle buses were continuing to replace Red Line service between JFK and Braintree stops Thursday morning.

The downed pole scuttled the shuttle plan.

That mess prompted the MBTA to ask customers to consider using the commuter rail from Braintree and Quincy Center stations to avoid JFK.

By 8:30 a.m., the utility pole and wires that were clogging traffic had been "removed or repositioned," according to MassDOT. Residual delays, however, remained.

Both the Red and Orange lines are running limited service. Only one Orange train operated back and forth between Oak Grove and Wellington all day.

Delays also hampered the Green Line.

Historically bad weather has beset the T for almost three weeks. MBTA General Manager Beverly Scott announced she was resigning from her post on Wednesday, as riders screamed about service problems.

Thursday, Gov. Charlie Baker said he had a productive meeting with Scott and her senior team, the purpose of which was to "discuss how to move forward at the MBTA."

"It was a good session for us to listen and learn," he said. "We value Dr. Scott and her team's efforts during this historical winter which has posed incredible challenges to our transportation system, and we appreciate the hard work of the MBTA employees who are still operating around the clock to help commuters."

Baker, after that meeting, denied that he had forced Scott out, according to State House News Service.

Big fix. Charlestown man's fund wants $300M to drag T into the 21st century

Last week, Janssen McCormick's wife, Kelly, tried to take the Orange Line one stop, from Charlestown to the North End. That one stop took two hours.

The experience prompted McCormick, a 30-year-old teacher from Charlestown, to launch a GoFundMe page. His aim? To raise $300 million for the ailing MBTA.

As of press time, more than 60 people — the vast majority of whom he doesn't know — have donated. Some have given $50. He's raised $1,280 in eight days. "A lot of people do recognize that it's tongue in cheek," McCormick told Metro. "They say, 'I understand it's a joke but let's embarrass the T.' I think people are just really frustrated."

McCormick said he really wanted to raise $30 billion — just enough to drag the T into the 21st century, he said. But that was too many zeroes for GoFundMe. He settled for $300 million.

State Sen. Thomas M. McGee, who heads the transportation committee, said the MBTA needs $3 billion of repairs.

Asked if he'd chip in, McGee laughed. "I'll have to take a look at it. What are his numbers at now?"

Weekend storm could cripple couple commerce

Storm warning. Valentine's Day blizzard threatens restaurants' bottom line, no reservations needed.

Meteorologists say a storm this weekend could dump as much as a foot of snow on Boston, starting on Saturday afternoon.

Boston's restaurant industry is worried that one of the biggest and busiest days on their calendar could be snowed out just when they need business.

Bob Luz, president of the Massachusetts Restaurant Association, said during the 17-day stretch that saw six feet of snow fall on Boston, many restaurants were closed or "virtually closed" for six days.

The weather, he said, "is having a crippling effect on us."

Some restaurant workers, he said, haven't been able to make a living in three weeks.

"I don't think anyone in America has seen 17 days like this and those are just sales you're not going to get back," he said.

He said the industry is hoping people treat Valentine's Day as a weekend-long holiday.

But if the storm does slam the area, some restaurants could accept walk-ins on Valentine's Day night, which is usually fully booked.

"I think everyone hopes it brushes out to sea," he said.

William Kovel, the owner of Catalyst in Cambridge's Kendall Square, said this winter is the worst for restaurants in his 15 years in the industry. "The volume of the snow has just made it unbearable," he said.

Valentine's Day is "probably the biggest day of the first quarter" for his business.

Stuart Street in Boston
NICOLAUS CZARNECKI/METRO

"It sounds bad. You see another storm coming and a lot of us are rolling our eyes, saying 'Really? You got to be kidding me,'" he said.

A trio of recent storms gave Boston its snowiest month-long period in its recorded history. Schools were cancelled, the T was shut and the city spent double its planned snow removal budget.

By late Thursday morning, Alan Dunham, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service, said the snow could start sometime Saturday afternoon and last into early Sunday.

The worst of the storm will be Saturday night, just when cupid is supposed to be stringing his bow.

The weekend promises to be blustery with wind speeds reaching 40 mph to 50 mph.

"There's potential for a significant storm to impact southern New England," said Dunham.

If the storm intensifies farther north of Boston, said Dunham, the city will see less snow. If it intensifies farther south, the city will see more snow.

"It's still two-and-a-half days away," said Dunham. "Things can change."

Teen arraigned for Jamaica Plain murder

A Hyde Park teen was held without bail Thursday after being arraigned for shooting a man to death in Jamaica Plain earlier in the week.

Josiah Zachery, 18, faces a murder charge for allegedly killing Kenneth Lamour, and a count of assault with a dangerous weapon for allegedly pointing a firearm at a Boston cop who was pursuing him.

The shooting occurred around 10:35 a.m. Wednesday near 891 Centre St.

As Zachery fled the scene, he allegedly pointed a gun at a Boston Police officer.

"The officer who was fired upon showed tremendous restraint and courage when chasing an armed assailant," said Boston Police Commissioner William Evans. "The actions of all my officers today, along with the cooperation from the community, ensured that a dangerous individual and a gun are off the streets."

Zachery will return to court on March 12. METRO hopeless.

Debate is underway
here in D.C. about what should come next on the military front, and that is proper. As much as we may dislike war, history tells us that sometimes vicious enemies will not cease their inhumanities unless forced.
But there is something to be said for the extraordinary power of kindness and love too.

Generosity, sympathy and a willingness to help others are every bit as woven into the fabric of America as is our ability to do battle.

And those qualities too,
as much as F-16s, make us stronger in the world. It is, after all, easy for our far-flung enemies to preach hatred against the Americans if all that their people see are drones and missile attacks.
It is harder when they see an American like Mueller, offering a kind look, an open hand, and help ... despite political, religious, ethnic

Enemies undoubtedly cower before America's but on this Valentine's Day, it is good to remember that while weapons win wars, kindness wins people. And the merchants of hatred fear our love too.

Two decades. Celebrating 20 years of Metro, the largest global newspaper

On Feb. 13, 1995, Metro launched its first-ever free newspaper edition in Stockholm, Sweden. Twenty years on, the newspaper has expanded across the globe to become the world's largest global newspaper with over 20 million readers. Sakari Pitkanen, a former longtime employee of Metro, who since the mid-1990s served as editor of Metro Stockholm and then global editor-in-chief of Metro International, tells us the success story.

At the time did you ever envision the paper becoming the global player it is today?
Personally, I was too busy with getting Metro Stockholm on its feet! But certainly, the founders of the newspaper did have plans for an international expansion early on.

In an ever-changing media landscape, what has made Metro stand out for two decades?

Being free of charge, certainly. Pay-for newspapers across Europe were and are in decline, so it was very difficult for them to compete with Metro. With the advent of the

Sakari Pitkanen / METRO

"While we made many enemies, we still have made 20 million friends — our readers across the world. I'd rather have readers as friends. I couldn't care less about anyone else."

Internet age, we were the first organization to say that news is a commodity that you could get for free.

Another key factor that has helped Metro has been the role of big cities. All over the world, cities have continued to expand and the new influx of people tend not to have a relationship with an established, traditional newspaper. That's where Metro came in. What's more, unlike old newspapers, we followed the needs of the modern reader. We recognized that the reader now is much younger and more female. We felt we were geniuses!

To coincide with the 20th anniversary, you have written a book on the history of the newspaper. The book title is a curious one: "The Art of Making Enemies in the Whole World." Is this what Metro has been about?

Certainly in the first 10 years since we launched, wherever we started a new Metro edition, we were met with fierce resistance, from lawyers, from industrial action — even bikers were blocking our advertising in the U.S. I recall what our CEO in the early 2000s, Pelle Törnberg, said — and I am paraphrasing here: "If you want powerful enemies and a bad reputation, start a newspaper. If you want powerful enemies all over the world and need massive bad press everywhere, start a global newspaper." ANTHONY JOHNSTON, METRO WORLD NEWS

Story 'rebrands violence as romance'

The social media campaign #50DollarsNot50Shades is asking people to donate $50 to a domestic violence shelter rather than going to see the "Fifty Shades" movie.

"The money you would have spent on movie tickets and a babysitter or movie tickets, popcorn and drinks will go towards serving victims of abusive relationships like the one glamorized in the 'Fifty Shades' series," the campaign's Facebook page reads. The hashtag's creator, Gail Dines, sums up the story as "a naive, vulnerable, immature woman" trying to change "a sexual sadist by showering him with love." That scenario plays out differently in the real world. "Women and girls need to know that should they meet a real Christian Grey, the end of that story will be them running for their lives, not living happily ever after."

DMITRY BELYEV

Our complicated relationship with 'Fifty Shades of Grey'

BDSM. For good, and naughty, the 'Fifty Shades effect' is real.

Since its publication in June 2011, "Fifty Shades of Grey" has had an undeniable impact far beyond the book world. The BDSM-inclined Christian Grey and his steamy seduction of Anastasia Steele brought S&M experimentation into the mainstream. But besides increases of handcuff incidents and rope sales, the books have exposed a niche side of sex — for better and worse — creating what's been dubbed "the Fifty Shades of Grey effect."

From sex shop to 'love store'

When Laurent Steeg helped

The sexcapades of Anastasia Steele and Christian Grey have led to a boom in the sex toy and bondage business.

CHUCK ZLOTNICK / UNIVERSAL PICTURES, GETTY IMAGES

"conceive" Passage du Désir in 2006, he wanted to offer a softer version of the sex shop experience. Living in the red light district of Paris, he knew that a certain type of man were not the only visitors to sex shops. "The idea behind this project is to take away the guilt and shame from the customers," he explains.

With 60 percent of their customers being women, the "Fifty Shades of Grey" trilogy and its accompanying products quickly sold out at Passage. Co-founder Patrick Prapant says the books have boosted sales of several items used by the characters — specifically woman-focused products. "We saw a massive increase of sales of Geisha balls, an item Anastasia tries in the novel," he says.

Sex and society

Readers might be curious about certain practices, but psychoanalyst and sexologist Catherine Blanc doesn't see it replacing the missionary position in the majority of people's sex lives.

"We tend to think that our generation is freer than our grandparents' generation, which is obviously untrue because every person makes their own way through the discovery of sexuality and eroticism," she says. "Sexuality is a very personal journey."

Sex toys have been around "since the dawn of time — we have found ancient models made of wax and wood."

Blanc says our fantasies now are pretty much in line with what humans have always privately thought about and practiced.

"People's fantasies aren't more extravagant than they have always been," she says. "Domination, possession, submission are traditional elements of human sexuality."

But the sex specialist is adamant that just because a sex act is trendy, doesn't mean it's for everyone. "Some young ladies mistake what they want and what they want to want because society tells them to," she says. "They are afraid to look [uptight]."

So if reading about Christian and Ana's adventures in the bedroom makes you want to get on the beaten track, go for it. But if it's not your cup of tea, don't push yourself — and if he really is a man worth keeping, he won't either.

Does 'Fifty Shades' fall limp?

Perhaps it seemed E.L. James' über-best-seller was too hot for the movies. And yet here it is anyway. But does the film actually have some merit? Are its sex scenes a letdown? What didn't make the cut? We investigate. MATT PRIGGE

Pros & cons

CON: Jamie Dornan, who plays alpha-shark billionaire Christian Grey, is pretty weak, although no actor could sell the line "I'm 50 shades of f—ed up."

PRO: Dakota Johnson, however, is very funny. Her Anastasia may seem deer-in-headlights, but she turns nervousness into killer deadpan line readings.

CON: The sex is, shall we say, flaccid. Not only that, it's in such small portions. Sorry, there's no geisha balls set piece.

PRO: Whittling down the BDSM to a nub means having to engage less in the book's questionable antics, not the least its misrepresentation of BDSM.

CON: The film had to remain faithful, and try as she might, director Sam Taylor-Johnson ("Nowhere Boy") can only transcend the florid passages so much.

PRO: Entirely gone is the book's biggest liability: that prose. Author E.L. James seems to only know 30 words, and two of them are "genital clamps."

CON: It's sill mommy-porn fantasy that offers a watered-down and troubling look at someone submitting to the whims of a studly man.

PRO: It's more turned on by their banter than their sex. This isn't Clint Eastwood's heroic saving of "The Bridges of Madison County," but it'll do.

Book vs. movie

What's missing?

For starters, no narration tracks means none of Anastasia's first-person musings, including clunkers like, "I work on my essay on 'Tess of the d'Urbervilles.' Damn, that woman was in the wrong place at the wrong time in the wrong century."

Jose, her friend who drunkenly makes a pass at Anastasia (but is stopped by Christian), disappears after his low point. Kate, her nosy roommate, has her part considerably lessened, and too all but vanishes after she's not longer very useful.

Most of the sex scenes are diluted or excised entirely. The tampon scene? Only in your dreams.

The novel's excessive wealth porn is still present but slightly eased. Where the novel freaked out every time Christian had her bumped up to first class, the film never once mentions this.

The book's accidental topicality — a discussion about an outbreak of measles and those pesky anti-vaccine idiots when Anastasia has dinner with Christian's parents — is sadly AWOL.

Origins. What's this about 'Twilight'?

If some of the plot twists and atmosphere of "Fifty Shades of Grey" seem familiar, that's because the book and film have their roots in another breakout literary success that doesn't get a ton of respect: Stephenie Meyer's "Twilight" series. In fact, E.L. James' best-seller was originally conceived as "Twilight" fan-fiction — spin-off tales created by readers that reimagine their favorite characters in different situations or romantic entanglements.

So how similar is "Fifty Shades of Grey" to "Twilight"? Well, replace Sleepy Forks, Washington, with bustling Seattle, swap out high school for grad school and change vampirism to sado-masochism, and there you go. NED EHRBAR

The past. Other mega-sellers made into films

'Gone with the Wind,' by Margaret Mitchell (1936)
Copies sold: 30 million
Movie year: 1939

A rabidly popular doorstep became an appropriately giant epic, and a handsome one at that. Every single shot in its nearly four hours is a full-on doozy.

'Lolita,' by Vladimir Nabokov (1955)
Copies sold: 50 million
Movie year: 1961

One of lit's masterworks sold because of its raciness. A movie was a no-brainer, but in 1961, director Stanley Kubrick couldn't even imply it was about pedophilia.

'Valley of the Dolls,' by Jacqueline Susann (1966)
Copies sold: 30 million
Movie year: 1967

It took a year for this trash opus to become a trash blockbuster. Three years later the studio that owned it mocked it with "Beyond the Valley of the Dolls."

'The Bridges of Madison County,' by Robert James Waller (1992)
Copies sold: 50 million
Movie year: 1995

Clint Eastwood's film of the worst novel ever written took a piece of cheesecake and made it into a beautifully understated adult romance.

Steamy streaming sex

The "Fifty Shades" film is surprisingly skimpy on salaciousness. These naughtier films are all currently streaming:

(Netflix Instant)

This is still pretty shocking, and the unrated cut on Netflix makes the big bonking centerpiece even longer, with Michael Douglas spending more time downtown — the kind of thing that still, amazingly, gets movies slapped with an NC-17.

(Hulu)

Even in the book, Anastasia and Christian come nowhere near the couple in this scandalous Japanese art film from 1976, which features real, endless sex, with one hell of a capper.

(Hulu)

Charlotte Rampling and Dirk Bogarde aren't just into BDSM in this 1973 shocker: She's a former concentration camp prisoner and he's her Nazi lover, who run into each other years later and pick things up again. Whee!

(Hulu)

This Swedish quasi-doc on its youth culture was a big hit in America in 1967. Why? Because it was frank about sex. In fact, it was the first mainstream film to include male frontal nudity.

Action. 'Kingsman' is a violent American espionage romp, but from England

Colin Firth teaches Taron Egerton how to become a gentlemanly killer for the government in "Kingsman: The Secret Service." / JAAP BUITENDIJK

Reuniting with "Kick-Ass" graphic novelist Mark Millar, director Matthew Vaughn makes a suitably over-the-top film out of Millar's "The Secret Service," with Colin Firth as a dangerous but debonair gentleman agent who recruits a low income kid (Taron Egerton) into his elite outfit to battle a dangerous billionaire (Samuel L. Jackson).

The lowdown: Vaughn's veddy English spy romp is like a brighter, cheekier Frank Miller: an equal opportunity offender that lobs countless cultural grenades — not because it's angry, as the terminally frothing Miller is, but just because it felt like it. It's the cat perched next to the spilled milk. The far right will love that it lampoons Islamic terrorists, global warming and Obama, but lose their heads when the film's splashiest set piece takes place in a homophobic, racist, anti-Semitic Deep South church. Trying to put a finger on what it's saying is pointless; it simply wants to upset everyone, just for kicks.

Is "Kingsman" parodying old school Bond or reasserting the franchise's classist, Old Britannia leanings? Truth is, "Kingsman" just doesn't care. It's a goof, a lark, a bit of silliness that blends dry English wit and reticence into American-style explosions and cool killings. It's an alternate universe Bond movie that arrives in an age when the series has gone dark. It's a movie for teenage boys if there ever was one, which is to say it's also powerfully sexless, right up to an ending that would titillate only a 14-year-old. MATT PRIGGE

● ● ● ● ●

It's too easy to slam a movie about screenwriting for its lazy, clichéd script, one that largely relies on the charm of its overqualified cast to carry it through. Lightweight semi-satires like "The Rewrite" have a certain comfort food charm, even when they turn rancid well before completion. Hugh Grant plays a washed-up author of an Oscar-winning classic, who grouchy accepts a position at an East Coast school. There he peoples his class with hotties with whom he can confer after school. That his hesitant romance with an older student (Marisa Tomei, reliably glowing) remains hesitant would count as a novel twist on the formula if it didn't clearly find the idea of Grant banging someone only four years his junior icky. In lovable cad mode, Grant is fun without trying, though, as here, it's a type that should never be forced into redemption. MP

Marisa Tomei doesn't quite romance Hugh Grant in "The Rewrite." / RIL IMAGE ENTERTAINMENT

'Leviathan'

● ● ● ● ●

Very, very loosely based on the Book of Job, Russia's entry for the foreign language film Oscar charts the almost comically miserable downfall of a hot-headed, small townner (Aleksei Serebryakov) undone by a politician, his neglected wife, his city friend and his own stupidity.

The Russian "Leviathan" is pretty bleak. / SONY PICTURES CLASSICS

None of this is happy, but director Andrey Zvyagintsev's approach is both clinical and darkly funny, with segues into

Kafkaesque humor and lengthy (and real) drinking scenes that recall John Cassavetes. MATT PRIGGE

These two friends wanted to see what would happen if they became a couple.
SANTIAGO CARRASQUILLA

Two best friends plan the perfect Valentine's Day

Creativity. There are many ways to show that you care.

This isn't the real-life story of "When Harry Met Sally."

Two years ago, best friends Jessica Walsh and Timothy Goodman decided to embark on a little experiment: After years of frustrating dates and being single in New York City, the pair wondered what would happen if they dated each other for 40 days. The result was the popular blog (and now book) "40 days of Dating: An Experiment."

While Walsh and Goodman didn't make it as a couple, they assure us that they are still closer than ever, despite the fact that Walsh got married to someone else a few months ago. "We're best friends and we're creative partners," Goodman says.

"We really hadn't anticipated all the press and Hollywood attention," said Tim. "We really just wanted to wrap ourselves in the context of today's dating culture."

One of the many things that the now former couple has in common is an artistic sensibility. Both Walsh and Goodman are graphic designers and incorporated their photos and texts into the book. We asked them how they would spend the perfect Valentine's Day.

Have a theme

"Sometimes it's fun to keep it themed, and I like to hop around because it's fun and makes the night a little more memorable," says Goodman. "You have to allow for the unexpected and you have to allow for serendipity in the city because it's kind of at your disposal if you open your eyes."

Get creative

You don't have to spend hundreds of dollars to find the perfect gift. Goodman says men in particular are often hesitant to get in touch with their crafty side — which he says is a mistake. "Anything you

Go for a ride

Since Valentine's Day falls on a Saturday this year, it's the perfect opportunity to take a mini day trip. Why not get out of the city for a few hours and enjoy nature or explore somewhere new? Walsh says the more unexpected the destination, the more memorable the weekend will be.

make by hand, and anything that comes from the heart, I think is so special...I think it's a real tragedy that too many men don't know how to tap into their imagination a little bit and create something, because it doesn't take much," Goodman points out. "Even just writing a little note and taking a photo of it and texting it to someone makes them feel like you spent a little time on it."

Gifts. These days, people really want a gift from the heart for Valentine's Day

For generations, items like roses, chocolate and jewelry have been go-to Valentine's Day gifts for Americans across the country. But a new survey commissioned by the jewelry research chain WP Diamonds provides a revealing look at what couples really want this holiday weekend.

It turns out that under 20 percent of Americans say material gifts are the most important part of Valentine's Day. Instead, the vast majority (86 percent) of those questioned said they valued romance, sex and passion.

It also looks like Americans today are increasingly valuing having great experiences over receiving nice things. A romantic evening out on the town was the top choice for a gift this Valentine's Day — even beating out an evening of passionate sex.

But the survey did strike one depressing note. People who are ready to move on in their relationships are set to do so immediately. Those who are ready to end things say they would break things off with their partner now, rather than waiting until after the 14th to avoid hurt feelings. LAKSHMI GANDHI

The '70s

Bill Murray

The early casts were stacked with future comedy stars, from Dan Aykroyd and John Belushi to Jane Curtin and Chevy Chase. While we'd like to choose future Sen. Al Franken, because his career took the oddest turn, we're picking Bill Murray, who dominated the box office in the '80s with "Ghostbusters," "Stripes" and more, and then began a late career renaissance as a dramatic actor who rewrote the book on post-"SNL" careers.

Catch the show's 40th anniversary special this Sunday at 8 p.m. on NBC.

For a program based on the brevity of sketch comedy, "Saturday Night Live" has been on for a long time — 40 years, to be exact. The show stayed relevant over the years thanks to performers who shaped the world of comedy. Here are the stars we think were the biggest influences on pop culture, decade by decade.

LISA WEIDENFELD

The '00s

Tina Fey

Remember when "Saturday Night Live" became all about the women? Along with being the show's first female head writer, Fey ushered in an era of women dominating the show, a trend that continued with Kristen Wiig and on to current star Kate McKinnon. She did take a break — to write the preeminent teen comedy of the decade, "Mean Girls."

Uma Thurman speaks out about her new look

So yeah, those photos of Uma Thurman on the red carpet earlier this week that got so much attention? She heard what you've been saying about them. Thurman stopped by the "Today" show for a chat and inevitably the online uproar around her new look came up. "I look weird," Thurman admits. "I guess nobody liked my makeup. I mean, I've been doing this for years and years and years, and people say nice things and they say mean things, and it's just like, whatever!" And she admits she'll likely not be rocking that shocking red carpet look again. "We saw how well the dark lipstick worked the other night," she joked.

The '80s

Eddie Murphy

It may be hard to remember, given the "Norbit" and "Daddy Day Care" years, but in the '80s Murphy was one of the sharpest racial comics around, covering racial issues in Reagan-era America, which was not a time known for its progressive politics. Though he hasn't returned to the show since the '80s, he's set to make an appearance for the big 40th anniversary special.

The '90s

Will Ferrell

While fellow '90s alum Mike Myers had a fairly unstoppable streak of hits, it's Ferrell's charming goofball style that has remained part of the comedy world. And it's hard to imagine any other actor from the show making quite the splash that Ferrell did with his George W. Bush impression, which was so popular that he brought it back during the 2008 election.

A.R.T.'s latest navigates the Civil War

It's a bumpy but intriguing ride in "Father Comes Home from the Wars." / EVGENIA ELISEEVA

Review. A provocative concept can't keep the pace moving in the company's new show.

Pulitzer Prize-winning playwright Suzan-Lori Parks' "Father Comes Home From the Wars Parts 1, 2 & 3" is the powerful tale of one slave's decision to fight in the Civil War — on the Confederate side.

Though the trilogy of plays (which will eventually become nine) has some brilliant, thought-provoking moments, it gets off to a rocky start largely because its framework is loosely based on Homer's "The Odyssey." Like any good Greek tragedy, Parks' drama boasts a chorus that discusses, seemingly ad infinitum, the issue at hand.

The problem is this Chorus of Less Than Desirable Slaves mulling over whether or not Hero will go to war falls flat because the banter isn't particularly engaging and adds little but time to a nearly three-hour production. Parks' use of contemporary slang helps, but it needs some sass and sizzle in order to ignite the kind of spark that would leave you on the edge of your seat throughout the epic production.

Parks knows how to write, but in the transition from page to stage something sucked the life out of "Part 1: A Measure of a Man." And no matter how good "Part 2: A Battle in the Wilderness" and "Part 3: The Union of My Confederate Parts" are, it's hard to recover the missing momentum.

Benton Greene's Hero packs the biggest emotional wallop explaining his decision not to run away in search of freedom, saying, "I'm worth something, so me running off would be like stealing." He's also the catalyst for a powerful, eye-opening examination of loyalty, integrity and what freedom might mean.

Horoscope

Aquarius | Jan. 21-Feb. 18
Think twice before reviving an old idea, friendship or hobby. If you are unsure, take a walk down memory lane and relive a past experience that left you confused.

Pisces | Feb. 19-March 20
Following your heart will lead to a poor choice. Resentment will grow if you try to take on responsibilities that don't belong to you. Put your needs first.

Aries | March 21-April 20
Get active. Unless you speak up and take action, no one will know what you want or what you can do. Avoid being overlooked by stepping up and showing everyone your strengths.

Taurus | April 21-May 21
The benefits of networking should not be overlooked. Get in touch with well-connected people who can show you the most promising direction. Offer a favor to receive a favor.

Gemini | May 22-June 20
Make a positive impression that accurately portrays what you have to offer. If you embellish the truth, you will ruin your chance to get ahead.

Cancer | June 21-July 22
A romantic evening will intensify an important relationship. Be aggressive, but stick to the rules and regulations on your quest to get ahead.

Leo | July 23-Aug. 22
Spend time with people who challenge you mentally and physically. You will find it impossible to turn down an opportunity to travel. A romantic liaison will heat up.

Virgo | Aug. 23-Sept. 22
A financial deal will reduce your cash flow, but the long-term benefits will be worth your while. A difference of opinion will escalate into a major feud if you don't compromise.

Libra | Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Shortcuts will end up costing you. A lofty sales pitch will not deliver what it promises. Carefully think your steps through before making a major decision.

Scorpio | Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Follow your heart. Attentiveness to home and family will cement your bond with the people who mean the most to you. Make changes that promote comfort.

Sagittarius | Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You can't run from emotional matters indefinitely. Face the inevitable, and instigate a conversation that will straighten out any misunderstanding you are faced with.

Capricorn | Dec. 22-Jan. 20
You are stronger than you think. Don't be threatened by someone trying to push you into something that you don't want to do. Stand by your beliefs.

Letters to the editor

Net neutrality doesn't mean equality

RE: "Net doesn't pay for itself" (Metro, Feb. 10)
Alton Lee's letter to the editor contains a list of false statements about the free market. Net neutrality means everyone pays the same market price. You pay more for more use, so the providers are NOT hurt. Allowing insiders and large players to manipulate is what disrupts the market. It reduces access for most. That access is needed to promote innovation. Favoring insiders promotes monopoly, not innovation. Adam Smith defined a free market as one that is free from manipulation. He warned that merchants would collude to abuse the market, and that regulation is needed to keep the market free. Lee's letter contains both a false threat and promise, and leads us to regulatory capture. That's the real danger. That's what crashed our economy in 2008.

HARRY THORN, VIA EMAIL

Free market enterprise needs to be dealt with pragmatically and not with "religious dogma" attitude.

Let Israel have its say in Congress

Israeli Prime Minister Netanyahu needs to address Congress. Everyone in this country needs to know how close Iran is to going nuclear. We heard President Obama make his case on sanctions. Now let's hear the other side. Congress should hear exactly what the prime minister has to say. What could be more important than a nuclear Iran? This would be a game changer for the U.S. and the Middle East. Israel is our trusted friend and ally. The prime minister deserves all our respect to be heard. This is not the time to play partisan politics. We all have too much at risk.

'EVERYBODY'S DOING IT' IS ACTUALLY A GREAT EXCUSE

I know what you're thinking. "Why isn't anyone making a big deal about Jerry Rice being a cheater?"

The question isn't just fair, it's expected. After all, everyone and their mother had a stone to throw Tom Brady's way during the two weeks leading up to the Super Bowl. And some of that criticism continued after Malcolm Butler's Super Bowl-winning interception.

There was no way to avoid it. The Patriots were cheaters. Brady and Bill Belichick had tainted legacies. There would certainly be an asterisk next to their name this season. All because of an investigation into deflated footballs that the Patriots allegedly used in the first half of an AFC Championship that later saw New England outscore the Indianapolis Colts 28-0 in a second half played with "normal" footballs, whatever that means.

Heck, the NFL doesn't even know what that means. And that's always been the real issue with Deflate-gate.

Do I deny that Tom Brady likes his footballs a certain way? No, because, of course he does. That's what happens when you allow teams to control their own footballs all season. Brady prepares them a certain way, officials check them out two hours before the game, and that's that.

These officials never checked for the football's PSI levels. It just never happened.

DANNY PICARD

@DANNYPICARD

"The Danny Picard Show" airs every weekday at DannyPicard.com. Danny can also be heard on WEEI 93.7 FM and seen on CSNNE.

Is that my opinion? Well, yes. But it's also based on actual reports that checking PSI was not a regular occurrence.

So whatever Brady did to his footballs before the AFC Championship wasn't anything new. He prepared the footballs like he always has. And as my ultimate message in this entire Deflate-gate fiasco goes: Every quarterback in the league prepares their footballs a certain way in order to get a better grip.

Jerry Rice was far from the only receiver to use stickum. / GETTY IMAGES

The "everybody is doing it" response just seems like a simple one. It's just common sense. Unfortunately, for the Patriots, not many football analysts and critics wanted to use common sense leading up to Super Bowl XLIX.

And now, people in New England want to know why a Hall of Fame wide receiver with three Super Bowl rings isn't receiving the same type of criticism the Patriots did after he admitted to using illegal stickum on his gloves throughout his storied 20-year career.

Rice even went to Twitter by saying, "All players did it! #equalplayingfield."

It's the same logic I used throughout all this Deflate-gate nonsense. Everybody was doing something to their footballs.

As expected, New Englanders want Rice to be labeled as a cheater. They want an asterisk next to his name in the record books. They want justice.

Me? I just want it all to go away.

Was Rice the only one to use stickum? Please. Is Brady the only QB who prepares his footballs a certain way? C'mon.

Heck, do the Atlanta Falcons have the only arena in sports that (allegedly) pumps in fake crowd noise? Even more laughable.

The "everyone does it" excuse may not be accepted by some. But it should be, because everyone is — in fact — doing whatever it is they're being accused of here in these three situations.

So, as fired up as I was over the reaction to Deflate-gate, I'm willing to let Rice slide. And I'm willing to accept Atlanta's fake crowd noise. But only if everyone accepts the fact that the Patriots aren't cheaters.

Because just like Rice said about the stickum on his gloves: Everyone's doing it.

'Be Like Mike' is back

In celebrating its 50th anniversary, Gatorade is bringing back its most popular commercial of all time. The "Be Like Mike" jingle will be heard on TV broadcasts throughout NBA All-Star weekend. The catchy commercial first aired in the summer of 1991 after Jordan and the Bulls won the first of their six NBA championships.

NHL

Bruins face a make-or-break road trip

When we next see the Bruins at TD Garden — on Feb. 24 vs. Vancouver — they could be a much different team. That's not to say a blockbuster trade is expected well ahead of the March 2 NHL deadline, or that by then they will have changed much in the Eastern Conference standings (currently four points ahead of Florida for eighth place). But their upcoming five-game road trip — the longest and most daunting of their entire 2014-15 season — could very well shape them for the rest of the season.

Boston (28-19-7) had its best month of the season in January (8-1-3), so what has changed in the last week, where they have lost three out of their last four? The easy trend to point to in each of those contests is that they have allowed the first goal each time. Furthermore, their disappearing offense has returned as they have scored a total of eight goals combined in that tough stretch. Head coach Claude Julien didn't mince words on Tuesday after Boston fell, 5-3, to Dallas (25-21-8).

CHRIS KELLY AND THE B'S HIT THE ROAD THIS WEEK. / GETTY IMAGES

"We had a poor work ethic on the power play (0-for-4)," Julien said. "It was a real disappointing effort, we only have ourselves to look at and blame for the loss."

The Bruins' road record this season is far from the best (11-10-3) and that will certainly be tested over the next few weeks. Four out of the five games appear to be against clubs that will reach the Western Conference playoffs, with only one mismatch on the horizon. Boston opens at Rogers Arena on Friday (10 p.m., NESN) against the Canucks (29-20-3), a team that should be right at their level. Vancouver is only 14-11-1 at home this season, so Boston needs to get some kind of positive result there. Monday's tilt (9 p.m., NESN) at Scotiabank Saddledome in Calgary (30-21-3) should be interesting as the Flames are another team that the Bruins haven't seen yet this season. Calgary has exceeded expectations this season and is 15-11-2 at home.

Without question, next Wednesday's game (10 p.m., NESN) at Rexall Place vs. the lowly Oilers (15-31-9) is a game that the B's absolutely have to win as Edmonton is still one of the worst teams in the NHL.

The back end of this trip is definitely the toughest part, however, as the Bruins visit St. Louis a week from Friday (8 p.m., NESN) and Chicago on Feb. 22 (3 p.m., NBC). RICH SLATE

NBA

Stars out in NY despite injuries

This season might be one of the biggest disappointments in the history of New York professional basketball, but for one shining weekend at least, the Big Apple will be the envy of every other NBA city, as Manhattan and Brooklyn will collaborate in hosting the league's All-Star Weekend festivities.

Lost in the abyss that's been Knicks and Nets basketball this season is the fact that for the first time since 1998, the Garden will host the All-Star game. The last time the league's best played this particular exhibition in New York, it was Michael Jordan's final venture in the game as a Chicago Bull and Kobe Bryant's maiden appearance. Bryant, then a second-year player, was so popular that he started the game despite not even starting for his own team at the time.

That year featured a who's who of future basketball Hall of Famers — 13 in all. And while this year's collection comes close to matching up in star power — particularly in the Western Conference —

it's different in that there are so many injury replacements, including Bryant, who is out for the season with an injured right shoulder. Bryant may be the biggest name on the infirmity list, but he's also joined by Dwyane Wade, Blake Griffin and Anthony Davis.

And that's not even including Carmelo Anthony, who is the lone representative for either New York franchise. Anthony, who is trying his best to make the contest and be the game's ambassador, is still reportedly waffling on whether to make the appearance. He was voted as one of the three starting front-court players (alongside LeBron James and Pau Gasol), but common sense says that the man who raked in $124 million with last summer's deal should be thinking only of his employers and the ramifications of playing on a bum knee.

Smart money would say that Anthony should be advised to shut it down for the season — and that includes Sunday's exhibition. But, with the All-Star game being in his own backyard, being the lone New York rep, and the fact that there's no telling when New York will be host again, Anthony doesn't sound like a guy who's open to reason.

"As of right now, I'll be there," said Anthony, following a Knicks loss in Orlando, Wednesday night. "I'll be at the game. I'll probably participate in the game. Unless something happens in the course of me rehabbing the next couple of days."

Anthony, who will also coach in the All-Star Celebrity Game with Spike Lee on Friday, sat out the loss to the Magic to rest his sore left knee. He's so banged up that he didn't even sit on the bench, as he was rehabbing in the trainer's room.

If he's too injured to help his own team — the team that's paying him $22.875 million this year — then one would inquire about the sanity of playing even one minute on Sunday.

Anthony, however, said he believes he'll have enough rest to take the floor.

"I'm going to try. The game is on Sunday [and] I feel better [Wednesday] than I felt yesterday. That [rest] will give me a whole week to see what happens and at least give it a try," said Anthony. TONY WILLIAMS
